The B-1 System Program Office (SPO) of the US Air Force will be holding an industry day on August 23, 2012 at Tinker AFB. The purpose of this event is to inform the business community the United States Air Force B-1 System Program Office (SPO) Tinker AFB, Oklahoma has a requirement to sustain the B-1 with an effort focusing on a broad spectrum to include, but not limited to, structural repair, electrical, hardware, software, supplies, engineering services, and research and development.

This Industry Day is looking for prospective contractors possessing the necessary B-1 engineering, manufacturing, and software knowledge and expertise to perform and manage multiple B-1 major sub system developments, hardware/software/repair programs and related integration activities without unacceptable delay to program schedules and unnecessary duplication of development costs.

This Industry Day is looking for prospective vendors with the B-1 institutional technical knowledge critical for supporting the completion of ongoing programs such as B-1 Full Scale Fatigue Test and Integrated Battle Station modification support and planning.

The goals of the Industry Day are: (a) to introduce the aerospace community (industry, academia, and Government) to potential B-1 future requirements; (b) to encourage and promote teaming arrangements among potential vendors having the relevant expertise, facilities, and capabilities. The Industry Day will include overview presentations and an opportunity to interact and present capabilities and concepts to government personnel in sidebar sessions.

If your firm possesses the technical capability, financial wherewithal, facilities, equipment and personnel resources, along with relevant experience/past performance to perform the type of work specified above, please submit a request to attend the Industry Day per the instructions below or submit an "Abstract response" based on the procedures below to David Bourbonnais, david.bourbonnais@tinker.af.mil.

Time: The industry day will be held Aug 23, 2012 @ 8:00 to 12:00.
